The Conradian Green Open Access policy to support researcher funder and mandate compliance (e.g. the REF in the UK):

In line with current HEFCE policy on open access, The Conradian supports and exalts the aims of scholars digitally self-archiving their refereed scholarship in open electronic archives. This process of self-archiving is also referred to as green open access. For authors based in the UK, this policy will allow your scholarship to comply with the HEFCE open access mandate for REF eligibility, subject to you depositing the manuscript.

Authors published in The Conradian are encouraged to immediately deposit their post-print (author-accepted manuscripts) into institutional or subject repositories upon acceptance to ensure long-term digital preservation of the scholarly record, to help remove the barriers to accessing scholarship, and to build a future in which research and education are more able to flourish. With this collegiate approach, The Conradian does not impose an embargo around access to the authors-accepted manuscript in an institutional repository.

The Conradian recommends that authors use repositories that conform to the Open Archives Initiative, including their protocol for metadata harvesting that facilitates the sharing of metadata to enhance online discoverability and to more efficiently disseminate content.

This policy is subject to revision in response to changes in the dynamic environment in which we work.
